

Job Ad – Indigenous Student

Praxis Consulting believes in expanding thinking, challenging ways of being, fostering connection, and aligning human interests with the possible.

We are looking for an Indigenous university student to join us for a 4-month term (with the potential to extend to 8-months) and contribute towards this purpose through the many research, strategic planning, organizational development, board governance, and project and change management initiatives that our firm plays a part in. This position is a project delivery and support role within the Praxis team and is instrumental in supporting the firm's work in the areas of research, planning, and project management.

We are looking for candidates who are self-motivated, self-managed, energetic, and willing to challenge themselves in a dynamic environment. In this role, the successful candidate will be working with some of Saskatchewan's foremost companies, organizations, community leaders, and business minds. This opportunity provides an early-career professional with significant exposure to complex organizational challenges, as well as mentorship that cannot be matched.

Key responsibilities of this role include, but are not limited to:

- Providing proposal writing support
- Supporting the development of client reports, including strategic plans and business cases
- Executing project work
- Supporting project managers
- Contributing towards and executing on Praxis internal projects, which could include marketing activities, process development, community initiatives, etc.

Generally speaking, as the successful candidate, you will ideally:

- Enrolled in a Business Administration, Statistics, Economics or Research field of study.
- Have a passion for learning, digging in, solving problems, and challenging ideas.
- Have exceptional ability to communicate effectively within verbal, written, and presentation formats.
- Have a clear ability to contribute critical strategic thinking and analytical skills to various business sectors.
