

Your Guide to Understanding the Winter 2022 Class Schedule

FNUniv Students

The following information will help you interpret the Winter 2022 class schedule. Please note that the following examples are snapshots of what you will see in the Visual Schedule Builder system. If you use UR Self-Service to search for courses, you will see the same information as the examples below but in a different format.

NEW FOR WINTER 2022

HYFLEX – A hyflex class is delivered on-site in a classroom and remotely. Students can attend either on-site or remotely. Students may attend the class section for the entire term on-site or remotely, or attend on-site or remotely as it fits their schedule for the week.

Online (Web) Delivered Courses

Some courses have undergone a formal online delivery development process that includes enhancements designed to support instruction and learning in an online environment.

These supports include UR Courses and many other multi-media enhancements. These courses are designated as Web-delivered classes, as seen in the example below. Most Web-delivered courses will not have scheduled meeting times, but some do, which will be shown in the class section selected. In the example below, the course is offered online. Please note that some online courses have mandatory meetings, which usually occur via Zoom. Please contact your instructor at the beginning of the semester to find out if this is the case.

Video-Conferenced Classes

A video conferenced class is a class section that is offered at an off-site location (Regional Colleges and First Nations University of Canada campuses) and uses video conference technology to deliver the course to multiple locations.

In the example below, the class ADMN 375 is video conferenced from the First Nations University of Canada's Regina Campus to Northern Campus (Prince Albert). The instructor will be located at the Regina Campus (S01/S02), and students will attend in class in Regina in Room FN 2002. For students at the Northern Campus (S10), a video conference assistant will be present during class time, and students will attend class at the Northern Campus in Room B15. As seen in the example below, these courses are normally restricted to students within specific communities or specific programs.
